patience and prayer, turning to their spiritual elders for guidance. Don't panic if you feel that you are so unable to manage your money as it is that you don't know how to even begin when it comes to giving to the Church. In peace begin the crucial work of developing godly financial stewardship, addressed in other articles in this issue of AGAIN.

I am certain we still need to hear the prophetic voice of Malachi. Remember the words God gave him to cry out: "Will a man rob God? Yet you have robbed Me! But you say, 'In what way have we robbed You?' In tithes and offerings." When we fail to use our finances properly—to be good stewards of that which God has so freely given to us—we are robbing God. There's no nice way to say it. If our priests are living on substandard wages, our ministries understaffed, our churches dilapidated, and our almsgiving to the poor and underprivileged a sham, while we personally surround ourselves with all the unnecessary possessions and expensive toys our culture offers us on a daily basis, we stand under the same condemnation. How dare we!

We must also remember that our God is a loving God, and He does not leave us without encouragement. The conclusion of that Malachi passage provides "the rest of the story" regarding not just tithing, but the spirit behind all giving to God: "'Bring all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be food in My house, and prove Me now in this,' says the Lord of hosts, 'if I will not open for you the windows of heaven and pour out for you such blessing that there will not be room enough to receive it.'"

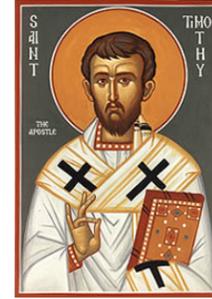

May He receive from us the dollars and cents of our existence, and with them the heartfelt love and worship we so imperfectly desire to give to Him. And may He send down upon us in return the true blessings we seek: the Kingdom of Heaven, and the gift of the Holy Spirit!

PASTOR'S NOTES/REFLECTIONS

A New Year Begins

September 1st began our new Church year. "Hurray, let's celebrate", new beginnings, out with the old, in with the new, this is how many of us refer to the New Year, but also those pesky resolutions and promises of change that we commit to. What resolutions did you make for yourself this year, and in our case, this New Liturgical Church year?

Oftentimes in the case of change, it's as hard to know what to change as it is to make the change itself. Like the old saying, "I can't see the forest for the trees." We don't "know" ourselves well enough, this is especially true (in my opinion) when we were younger, when we were "full" of ourselves, but also later on in life when we are blinded by our own rationalizations and years of looking the other way. We have good intentions, but how to start, and where to start.

Some things are obvious, like some friends of mine who wanted to stop smoking, yep, one day they committed themselves to never smoke again, and they succeeded, some of them. For the ones who did succeed, "first time out of the box", it was a mighty struggle, it cost them something and it hurt, but they won the victory. For the ones who didn't succeed "first time out of the box", they recommitted themselves, dropped their pride, sought some help, and over time, ultimately won the victory. The same would hold true for

YOUR COUNCIL IN ACTION

I had hoped we would have started construction by now on the link wall. Sometimes I forget this is not my timing but God's.

St. Timothy's is moving forward with God's mercy and direction. With the upcoming Chrismation's and Baptisms we can see God's love and how He is blessing our parish.

Although at times our projects seem like they are not moving forward, the Link Rd. wall and the playground, God willing, these unfinished projects will be completed soon. The additional information/details required by the City of Fairfield should be completed soon allowing the issuing of the permit for us to begin construction on the Link wall. We will need several work days to complete the playground. Remember, it is always a great time working together for the parish. We will try to give as much prior notice as possible for the work days.

SISTERS OF ST TIMOTHY

Sisters of St Timothy,

As some of you may know, Lana has decided to step down from her role as President of the Sisters of St. Timothy. Hala Khoury, who has been serving as Vice President, has graciously agreed to take on the role of President. Election for a new Vice President will be conducted at the next meeting.

In August we had a wonderful pool party at Mary Kenney's house and the bridal shower for Clarice Allen was wonderful. Future events will be planned at the next meeting as well.

MEN'S FELLOWSHIP

Hello Everyone!

Well, summer is over. In August, Mary's pool party was great fun and we got a good start on staging the materials for the kid's play area at church. In September, we will be having dinner with Father after Vespers on Saturday, Sept 27 at a location to be announced.

At this time, we will also discuss future events—a retreat in the Sierras, a trip to the monastery. Please come prepared to share what you would like to do.

In Christ,

Tom

yearly church festivals and ethnic events?"

I've rarely heard of a priest forbidding converts to tithe to the local parish. It's hard to say "no" to consistent, generous financial support. And in many cases, the people dropping their regular tithe checks into the church offering box every month are also the ones helping to man the booths at the church festival, learning to bake baklava for the bazaars, and sending in extra donations for emergency appeals. In my experience, it's rarely a matter of "either/or" for those who tithe.

In case you haven't guessed it, I am a firm believer in the practice of tithing today. I've tithed all my life, and have no intention of abandoning the practice. But after nearly 20 years in the Orthodox Church, my understanding of this discipline has definitely matured. Here's what I'd say now:

(1) For those who tithe, remember that God desires every corner of our heart, not a percentage. The tithe—even from its most ancient days—was a minimum standard, a guide to ensure basic, consistent giving, not a be-all and end-all. If we think that giving a tithe "gets us off the hook," we're placing ourselves in the company of those Pharisees the Lord debated with on a daily basis. We use a rule of prayer each day to guide us in our prayer life. But we don't say, "Thank God! I've done my ten minutes of prayer this morning, now I don't have to pray again until tonight!" A rule of prayer is just a starting point for prayer, a call to order, not the total of all we do. The same thing applies to the tithe.

(2) For those who do not tithe, exercise caution. There's one really wonderful excuse for not tithing, as long as it's honest: "I give way more than ten percent already, and would need to reduce my giving considerably to get down to a tithe." It's tempting to think we're giving vast sums to the Church, when in fact our giving amounts to pocket change by year's end. The statistics here are grim. In the typical church today, 5 percent of the congregation gives 50 percent of the weekly offering. Another 20 percent of the congregation gives 40 percent of the church's income. The remaining 75 percent of the typical congregation contributes 10 percent of the incoming dollars. Nearly 75 percent of American church attendees drop only about one dollar a week into the offering plate by the time everything is said and done. [Refs in Handmaiden?]

(3) Our contribution to the Church should never be a matter of personal ego inflation. How sad it is that the Church often encourages more giving by posting the names of donors, and making flattering speeches about how much so-and-so has given. Our Lord spoke about the evils of public religiosity: "But when you do a charitable deed, do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing, that your charitable deed may be in secret; and your Father who sees in secret will Himself reward you openly" (Matthew 6:3-4).

(4) Be honest. While precedents for tithing exist in Church history, things did change after the coming of Christ. We do find more references to tithing in the writings of the Church than we do to bingo! But I don't believe any of us can just pull out our favorite Old Testament proof text or patristic quote and hammer people over the head with it today. The patristic evidence is mixed. Not every Church Father taught on tithing. Not every Church Father tithed.

(5) For those just becoming aware of this conversation, be patient. It is easy for someone like me to get carried away with this topic. As I've said, emotions run high when it comes to tithing. But our Church also includes many people who have not given it much thought one way or the other. They may feel like they've walked into a room where a heated argument is under way, and find themselves being challenged to immediately commit to one side or the other. Those of us with strong beliefs on the question need to treat these brothers and sisters with love, acknowledging that this is a challenging topic in many ways. And those working to form their beliefs should approach the question of tithing with those who want to lose weight perhaps, or those who want to be more physically active, to exercise more, or maybe and more importantly, those who want to be less irritable or angry, or less selfish with time spent on themselves, wanting to give more of themselves to others.

By the way, I'm not at all suggesting that everyone who smokes should stop smoking, or that everyone who isn't a size 10 or with a 30" waist should diet and exercise like crazy, but simply as an example here in this reflection, that if you see the need and resolve to change, then by all means start the process, and with God's help, make the change. As we consider the subject of change and the placement of our Liturgical New Year at the end of August and the beginning of September, I would like to focus briefly on the three Great Feasts of the Church that fit into this time period. One of which we celebrate today, as our Metropolitan has transferred the Feast of the Nativity of the Theotokos, to fall one day earlier this year, the 7th of September. That way it falls on a Sunday, when more people would be in attendance, than the actual day, the 8th of September, which would be tomorrow, on Monday, when most of us would have to be at work.

First on the list is the feast we just celebrated, The Falling Asleep of the Mother of God or Dormition of the Theotokos or Feast of the Assumption, all the same feast, just named a little differently. On the day of the Feast some of us traveled to Calistoga and celebrated it with our sisters in Christ from the Holy Assumption Monastery. It is their Patronal Feast Day, and what a day it was and what a joy it was just to be with them, to share in their joy and piety, a festal day of celebration, complete with Archbishop Benjamin and several other OCA priests, and Serbian alike.

A beautiful Hierarchal Divine Liturgy, complete with awesome bell ringing (four of the sisters all ringing individual bells, ear muffs on, beautifully synchronized, true experts!), a great procession around the Chapel with Icons and Holy Water sprinkled everywhere, and a banquet style meal with all the fixings afterwards to cap off a wonderful day of celebration. Change happens here. Just to be in the same space with these pious nuns without them even saying a word is enough to fortify any hungry or thirsty soul who is seeking to deepen his or her spiritual relationship with Christ, and to change. It is part of our calling after all, confirmed in our Epistle reading from St Paul to the Galatians who writes, "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature. And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God" (Galatians 6: 15,16). Yes peace and a new creation. In a sense to "see the vision" for ourselves, of lives changed in these nuns, of a new creation, and of their lives fully committed, as "white martyrs". At the very least, celebrating the Feast of the Dormition, of the Theotokos, and knowing her steadfastness of will, her purity and sinlessness, as the Mother of God, our conscience is pricked, in a good way, by the Holy Spirit, to want and to seek something deeper spiritually for ourselves.

This same concept holds true for her Nativity, which we celebrate today, and the steadfastness of faith that her parents, Joachim and Anna, demonstrated, even in their old age, and seemingly hopeless barrenness. God heard percent sacrificial giving. "For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that you through His poverty might become rich" (2 Corinthians 8:9; see also Philippians 2:5-8). No wonder Jesus praised the widow in Jerusalem for placing two small copper coins into the Temple treasury, yet had little to say to the wealthy benefactors who were probably depositing the exact amount of money prescribed by the Mosaic Law: "For all these out of their abundance have put in offerings for God, but she out of her poverty put in all the livelihood that she had" (Luke 21:4). We read in the Book of Acts that early believers sold all they had—both lands and houses—and brought the proceeds to the apostles, who distributed them to each according to need (Acts 4:34-35).

(3) The principle of New Testament giving is clearly the principle of wise stewardship and concern for the needs of others. Saint James reminds us that: "Pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father is this: to visit orphans and widows in their trouble, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world" (James 1:27). St. Paul praises the Philippian believers for their faithful and generous support of his apostolic ministry: "When I departed from Macedonia, no church shared with me concerning giving and receiving but you only. For even in Thessalonica you sent aid once and again for my necessities" (Philippians 4:15-16). A few verses later, he calls their financial gifts "a sweet-smelling aroma, an acceptable sacrifice, well pleasing to God." This beautiful imagery confirms the Mosaic understanding of tithing and giving as an act of worship.

Tithing in the Church

Sadly, there are Orthodox Christians who argue that tithing is merely a Protestant phenomenon. As we have seen, tithing is an ancient practice—it most certainly did not originate at a meeting of the Southern Baptist convention. The real question is, should we practice this discipline today, or has it passed away, like the rites of purification? To answer this question, Orthodox Christians must look beyond the pages of Scripture to the ongoing presence of the Holy Spirit as expressed through the Holy Tradition of the Church. What happened after the close of the Book of Acts and the end of the first century?

The writings of the Church Fathers include a number of intriguing references to tithing. Here are just a few quick examples:

- From the third-century document Didascalia Apostolorum: "Set aside part offerings and tithes and first fruits to Christ, the true High Priest, and to His ministers, even tithes of salvation to Him. . . . Today the oblations are offered through the bishops to the Lord God. For they are your high priests; but the priests and Levites are now the presbyters and deacons, and the orphans and widows. . . . Your fruits and the work of your hands present to him, that you may be blessed; your first fruits and your tithes and your vows and your part offerings give to him; for he has need of them that he may be sustained, and that he may dispense also to those who are in want, to each as is just for him."

- From Saint John Chrysostom, Homilies on Ephesians: "Woe to him, it is said, who doeth not alms; and if this was the case under the Old Covenant, much more is it under the New. If, where the getting of wealth was allowed and the enjoyment of it, and the care of it, there was such provision made for the succoring of the poor, how much more in that Dispensation, where we are commanded to surrender all we have? For what did not they of old do? They gave tithes, and tithes again upon tithes for orphans, widows, and strangers, whereas some one was saying to me in astonishment at another, 'Why, such an one giveth tithes.' What a load of disgrace does this expression imply, since what was not a matter of wonder with the Jews has come to be so in the case of the Christians? If there was danger then in omitting tithes, think how great it must be now."

This quote from the Gospel of Matthew represents the very mind and heart of God Himself regarding this matter of tithing. Jesus was not seeking some type of financial compensation from His people—a paying back of the debt owed to the Holy Trinity for services rendered. It is ridiculous to imagine God needing, or in any way desiring, any physical remuneration from the helpless creatures He had come to save. Speaking through the Psalmist, God declares: “For every beast of the forest is Mine, / And the cattle on a thousand hills. / I know all the birds of the mountains, / And the wild beasts of the field are Mine. / If I were hungry, I would not tell you; / For the world is Mine, and all its fullness” (Psalm 50:10–12).

The above passage from Matthew is interesting for another reason. It is one of only a handful of passages in the New Testament that speak of tithing. The only others are its parallel account in the book of Luke (11:42), the story of the Pharisee and the Tax Collector (Luke 18:9–14), and a handful of passages in the Book of Hebrews relating to the story of Abraham’s tithe to Melchizedek.

Why is this so? Why don’t we read about the brethren in Corinth being told to set aside part of their tithes for the suffering church in Jerusalem? Why are there no instructions for new convert churches regarding how to set up a ten-percent tithe? Why did Jesus Himself only refer to the tithe on two occasions, both of them at least slightly negative in connotation? (The first is quoted above. The second is found in Luke 18, where the self-righteous Pharisee boasts, “I thank You that I am not like other men—extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this tax collector. I fast twice a week; I give tithes of all that I possess.”)

Answers to this question have varied widely, depending on the perspective of the interpreter. Some have said that this silence reflects nothing more than the fact that the practice of tithing continued unabated into the New Testament period. Jewish converts to Christianity, already accustomed to paying their tithes to the Temple, simply transferred those offerings to the Church. Gentile converts would have been taught the importance of tithing from the beginning. It wasn’t even worth writing about, end of discussion.

But others have argued that the ten-percent tithe faded away under the New Covenant, as did worship on the Sabbath, Temple rites, and the entire sacrificial system as it existed under the Mosaic Law. The reason it is not mentioned in the New Testament is that there was nothing to talk about—tithing had ceased to exist.

Let’s set aside that discussion for a few moments in order to make some fundamental observations about the issue of money and giving in the New Testament.

(1) Although our Lord spoke little about the practice of tithing in the Gospels, He had much to say about the spirit of giving that formed the basis of the Old Covenant system of tithing. How much did He say? He had more to say about the proper stewardship of money than about any other single topic—including love, family, holiness, sin, honesty, and more. It is curious that many pastors recoil at the thought of discussing financial issues from the pulpit. Yet our Lord returned to these matters over and over again. God treats giving like a joyful topic, not a burden. This shouldn’t really surprise us. After all, the basis for true and God-pleasing giving is a thankful heart with a joyful spirit. “So let each one give as he purposes in his heart, not grudgingly or of necessity; for God loves a cheerful giver” (2 Corinthians 9:7).

(2) The supreme model of giving in the New Testament was not based on ten percent, but on a hundred-percent commitment of personal resources. As St. Paul reminds us, our Lord provides the ultimate example of hundred-their prayer, removed their reproach among men, and rewarded them, the Angel of the Lord visiting both of them individually. To Anna the Angel announced that, “The Lord has heard your prayer and you shall conceive, and Anna said: “As the Lord my God lives, if I beget either male or female, I will bring it to the Lord my God; and it shall minister to Him in Holy things all the days of its life”. To Joachim the Angel said, “The Lord God has heard your prayer. Go down hence; for, behold, your wife Anna shall conceive. And Joachim went down and called his shepherds, saying: Bring me hither ten she-lambs without spot or blemish, and they shall be for the Lord my God; and bring me twelve tender calves, and they shall be for the priests and the elders; and a hundred goats for all the people. And, behold, Joachim came with his flocks; and Anna stood by the gate, and saw Joachim coming, and she ran and hung upon his neck, saying: Now I know that the Lord God has blessed me exceedingly; for, behold the widow no longer a widow, and I the childless shall conceive”. And Joachim rested the first day in his house (Protoevangelium of James).

Both of them answered with a sacrificial response. Anna, that this child would be brought to the Lord, and that it would serve Him all the days of its life, and Joachim, with a multitude of his flock, she-lambs, calves and goats. This sacrificial example from the Grandparents of God leads us to the Great Feast of the Exaltation of the Cross (September 14th). For it is only through our cooperation, being receptive to sacrificially denying ourselves, as Jesus Himself did, when we are prompted by the Holy Spirits leading, that real change and holiness can occur in our lives. For as the Scriptures reminds us, “If anyone would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me” (Matthew 16:24). “For whoever desires to save his life will lose it, but whoever loses his life for My sake will save it” (Luke 9:24). Beloved in Christ, may our spiritual hearts, our nous, through the Holy Spirits leading, be like the fertile ground that accepts the seed of truth that Jesus Christ is, and may that seed of His life be planted deeply and then grown, through our sacrificial life, to a ripe harvest of the spiritual fruit of the virtues. Then that Light, which shines so brightly in us, others may see, and desire that same salvation for themselves, for truly Christ is in our midst!

I remain,

Your unworthy servant,
Fr John

THE TRAIL OF THE TITHE FR THOMAS ZELL

One of my earliest childhood memories is of piling into the back of our family car on Sunday morning and heading off to our little Baptist church in Klamath Falls, Oregon. Along with ensuring that my brother and I were properly cleaned and dressed for the occasion, my father would always drop several coins into our hands, so that we in turn could drop them into the offering plate at church. Tithing was something Dad faithfully practiced all his life, and he wanted to make sure his sons followed suit. Having lived with this tradition for so long, and loving it so much, it is hard for me now to stop and look at it objectively. But since the concept has become somewhat an object of debate today, I would like to examine both the myth and the realities behind this practice, and to follow the trail of the tithe.

Tithing in the Old Testament

In English, Greek, and Hebrew, the word “tithe” comes from a derivative of the number “ten,” and means the setting aside of a tenth of one’s income for a specific, often religious purpose. Tithing is an ancient practice—very ancient.

While tithing is a critical practice of the Old Covenant, it did not originate with Moses and the giving of the Law on Mount Sinai. In the biblical account, the tithe actually shows up some five centuries before the Law was given. We first hear of it in the Book of Genesis. On his way home from rescuing his nephew Lot from captivity, Abraham journeys through the land of Canaan and encounters a mysterious man named Melchizedek, who was both king of the city of Salem (modern Jerusalem) and priest of the most High God. In Genesis 14:18–20 we read that when Abraham drew near, Melchizedek came out to meet him, blessed him (a story in itself), and Abraham in return gave Melchizedek “a tithe of all.” The writer of the Book of Hebrews makes a point of saying that through Abraham Levi himself, and thus, the entire levitical system established through Moses, paid a tithe to this ancient and enigmatic figure.

We are not told who told Abraham to tithe (it wasn’t Melchizedek), what guidelines he was following, why he felt compelled to provide this portion of his goods, where the idea originated, or when it came to be a custom. The Genesis story simply relates what took place and moves on without comment. While scholars disagree as to the meaning of all this, we do know for certain that the custom was not unique to Israel. It is a matter of historical record that many other ancient nations (Sumer, for example) practiced some form of tithing in the early days of civilization. As the International Standard Bible Encyclopedia notes, tithing is a practice that is “ancient and deeply rooted in the history of the human race.”

Not a Tithe but Tithes

It is also important to remember that for the nation of Israel and for faithful Jews during the Old Testament period, not just one, but three separate tithes were prescribed. In simplified form, the three tithes were:

- (1) An annual tithe, to be paid towards the support of the Levites, priests, and other religious personnel, who were not allowed an inheritance of their own and thus were at the mercy of the state (see Numbers 18:21–24).
- (2) A separate annual feast tithe, which went towards the expenses and upkeep of the Temple, and the various feasts and sacrifices surrounding it (see Deuteronomy 14:22–27).
- (3) A third-year tithe for the poor of the land, and again for the Levite (see Deuteronomy 26:12f).

So to “run the numbers,” by the time all of these various tithes were paid into the treasuries, along with the various other taxes, offerings, and contributions, it is likely that a faithful Israelite male under the Old Covenant paid closer to a third of his annual income toward some form of tithe, not just ten percent!

The Spirit Behind the Law

Crunching numbers is one thing. More significant is the question why? Why did God demand this regular offering of a percentage of personal income? Consider the following observations.

(1) The tithe was not optional under the Old Covenant. It’s not human nature to reach into hard-earned savings and pull out a portion for a purpose beyond the support of one’s family. Many ancient Israelites were tempted to look for loopholes in this commandment—and to their spiritual detriment, some succeeded. The prophet Malachi speaks directly to this point. By his day, Malachi needed to address his message not to a single group, but to practically the entire nation: “Will a man rob God? Yet you have robbed Me! But you say, ‘In what way have we robbed You?’ In tithes and offerings. You are cursed with a curse, for you have robbed Me, even this whole nation. Bring all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be food in My house” (Malachi 3:8–10). This is tough talk—and it is not unique to Malachi. Many other harsh words such as this can be found elsewhere in the writings of the Old Testament prophets.

(2) The paying of the tithe was first and foremost an act of worship, not merely a duty. When it comes to finances, we often tend to think in secular, rather than religious concepts. We owe our money to the bank, the credit card company, or the IRS. God, on the other hand, gets the spiritual stuff—or at least it often plays out that way. The perspective of the Mosaic Covenant was much more holistic when it came to such matters. Rather than a nagging debt to be settled over and over again, year after year, the payment of the tithe was seen to be a privilege—an act of worship, a reasonable sacrifice, a giving back to God of a portion of that which He has given to His people.

This is even more obvious in an agrarian economy such as that of the ancient world. Today, we rarely even see the money used to pay most expenses. It clicks over from some unseen electronic fund, and tumbles out of an impersonal bank account over the phone lines. Other than a deduction in the checkbook, we hardly notice the transaction. In ancient days, the tithe was not so much a matter of bringing in gold and coins (although that happened). It was more a giving to God from the fruit of one’s own toil and sweat. It was the first and best fruit of the land: wheat, wine, oil, produce, and firstlings of livestock.

(3) The tithe was considered to be a minimum standard, not the total of all giving. This can be seen clearly throughout the passages of the Old Testament, and especially in the Pentateuch (the first five books of the Old Testament), where the teaching is most clearly expanded and set forth.

Jesus may have had this teaching in mind when He spoke to the Pharisees of first-century Jerusalem about tithing. He railed against these “teachers of the Law” not because they had failed to follow the letter of the Law (by all appearances, they had meticulously followed the minimum standard and kept current with all accounts), but because in the scrupulous performance of this minimum, they had totally missed the true spirit behind the Law. To them, Jesus raised His voice in righteous indignation: “Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For you pay tithe of the mint and anise and cummin, and have neglected the weightier matters of the law: justice and mercy and faith. These you ought to have done, without leaving the others undone. Blind guides, who strain out a gnat and swallow a camel!” (Matthew 23:23–24).
